

Please, please, please, NO CELL PHONES on airplanes! As one of the last bastions of quiet in our crowded, tech-dependent world, allowing use of cell phones on flights would create many problems. There has been talk of individual airlines creating rules or "etiquette guidelines" that would supposedly make cell phone use aboard planes better for everyone. However, enforcement of these rules would be intermittent and subjective at best. Flight attendants would be reduced to Phone Police, a complete waste of their time and energy. They are there to ensure the SAFETY of the passengers, not make sure cell phone chatter gets out of hand. In addition, the cell phone chatter itself would be a safety risk, as passengers are too distracted to pay attention to safety announcements, directions from flight attendants, or other information. Let's just leave well enough alone. IF IT AIN'T BROKE, DON'T FIX IT!!!
